The Dark Game

Paul B. Janeczko wrote "Top Secret - A Handbook of Codes, Ciphers, and Secret Writing". This 249-page book has six chapters, 'Source Notes', 'Bibliography', 'Credits' and 'Index'. Many of the sixty-plus books won't be found in your Public Library. Janeczko liked to read books on crime and detection, the FBI, the Secret Service, and Treasury Agents. This is an educational and entertaining read. The best value is its Bibliography of books that go into more detail. Chapter 1 discusses the Culper Spy Ring that provided information to George Washington. This prevented defeat and won battles. Benjamin Franklin created propaganda to aid the Revolution. Benedict Arnold's character led him into treason. Invisible ink was used to hide secret messages.

Chapter 2 tells about the Civil War. Elizabeth Van Lew nursed Union prisoners and gathered information that was sent to the Union Army. She also helped prisoners to escape. The Union created a Balloon Corps to gather information on enemy forces. The telegraph allowed quick communication. There was a "clothesline" code and a "window-shade" code. Rose O'Neale Greenhow lived in Washington and gathered information for the Confederates. She continued to do so after house arrest. A black housekeeper brought news of the CSS Virginia, an ironclad ship. Harriet Tubman was the most important spy; she helped runaway slaves and escaped Union soldiers to go to the North.

The Great War is described in Chapter 3. This begins with the Revolution in Mexico. There was trouble along the border and a civil war in Mexico. Germany intervened in Mexico. The "Bridgeport Projectile Company" is described (p.87). Saboteurs created fires and explosions with "cigar" bombs. The "Black Tom" explosion was the worst. [Read "The Enemy Within" by Henry Landau for the best description.] The solution of the Zimmermann Telegram brought the US into the war (pp.104-115). Choctaw Indians spoke a language that could not be understood by the enemy.

Chapter 4 tells about some events of WW II. FDR created the OSS as a central intelligence agency to share information. Virginia Hall was one of the most successful spies. Spies need support: false documents and real cash. Agent “Garbo” was the greatest double agent of WW II. OSS training is described (pp.150-155). Chapter 5 discusses Cold War Spies. A tunnel was built in Berlin to tap Soviet telephone lines. The U-2 spy plane was built to gather information on Soviet capabilities (the “bomber gap”). On May 1, 1960 a U-2 plane malfunctioned and crashed in Russia. This caused the cancellation of the Summit conference. There was a clever listening device in our ambassador’s residence.

Chapter 6 tells about “moles”, employees who worked for the enemy. One worked for the CIA, another for the FBI. Cyber-Espionage is a threat to everyone who uses a computer attached to the Internet. [Defective design?] A virus in e-mail is hard to detect. [Never open an attachment from someone you don’t know.] Spy Satellites take pictures all over the world. They also handle television signals, telephone calls, and weather reports. GPS devices use signals sent from a satellite. Echelon satellites take pictures and listen to communications, even e-mails. Groundbreaker satellites listen to ground-line conversation. [No mention of monitoring traditional written communications. Does this also goes on?]
